Commenting on the results, Jonathan Wax, President and CEO stated, "This is the sixth straight quarter over the previous year's quarter of revenue growth and the first quarter of profitability for Digital Power since the fourth quarter of 2002. We continue to be impressed by the overall market receptivity of our commercial products, particularly with our high-density front end product lines and the stability of our military revenue. This improvement resulted primarily from a cross section of previously announced sales, manufacturing and restructuring initiatives, which once again maintained our gross margins. We are particularly pleased with our ability to grow revenue in excess of 30% from the previous quarter and maintain our gross margin without the addition of significant overhead or negative material variances. This is a tribute to our hardworking employees and our strategic partners".
